Proposal

My final website project will continue the main idea of my midterm project. I will keep the theme of "travel," and still include three different travel destinations. The goal of this website is to let users easily explore the places I want to share, like a small and simple travel guide. The site will include several pages, and each destination page will contain a short introduction, photos, and some of my own thoughts and feelings about the place.

For the design, I will keep a style similar to my midterm project, but I will make it more complete for the final project. I plan to use clean and soft colors that match the atmosphere of each travel landmark. I will also change the fonts I used before to make the text easier to read, so the whole website feels more consistent. The layout will remain simple and organized, with text and images placed neatly to create a smooth browsing experience.

To meet the requirements of the final project, I will include several types of animation and interactivity. For the JavaScript interaction, I will create a button that can change pictures on the page. For the p5.js, I plan to add a simple moving animation, such as a plane flying around an earth shape, to match the travel theme. For the jQuery part, I will include a small interactive effect, such as fading in text or smoothly showing extra information when the user clicks something. In addition, I will create another one CSS animation, possibly for the gallery images or for a small design element on the homepage.

Overall, I hope this final project can expand the travel theme from my midterm and make it more complete. At the same time, it will help me demonstrate what I learned in this course, including animations, interactive features, and front-end web development techniques.
